Members

The Newsletter will be coming out on the 15th of each month. Send your articles or information to the editor by the 12th of each month.

BUDDING FLY FISHING WRITERS

Here is your chance to gain some experience writing about your fabulous fly fishing trips to places near and far. The club newsletter is seriously lacking in members written and photographic accounts of our fishouts. Of course you may not think a trip to Putah Creek is worthy of such notoriety, but remember, many members have never been there and would welcome a description of how your fishout went And as for a trip to Alaska or Baja, a story of your adventure would be most appreciated. Send articles to the editor

NOTE FROM TREASURER, BILL PEAKES – Mission Peak Fly Angler's patches and pins are available from Bill at a nominal price. New members should have received either a pin or a patch when they joined; if not, call Bill Peakes.

The President's Message

Another month has come and gone. Those of us that are involved with "Trout in the Classroom" are just about to wind up the process for the year. We have successfully released Rainbow trout fry in either Quarry Lakes or Lake Temescal. This is such a great program and hopefully some of you will be interested in participating next year. The students range from Kindergarten to Sixth grade.

The students find our presentations interesting and it is most rewarding when they begin to ask intelligent questions and begin to understand the relationships between our lives and the lives of the trout. Pollution, trash, and all the other problems that affect the trout also impact our lives. These very students will be the Stewards of this Earth in the next 20 years. They are our hope for maintaining a livable Earth by the middle of this century. Think about joining us next year for an experience you will not forget.

On another topic, be sure to watch the announcements for fish-outs. These fish-outs are a great way to pick up knowledge about fly fishing and to also become more a part of the club by building friendships while out on the stream or lake.

Welcome to new members Walt Klinefelter and Santiago Jimenez. I hope you find what you are looking for in our club. Don't hesitate to jump right in and ask questions, go fishing with us and/or ask us to help you with tying or casting. It is your club too.

Dean

God

Opinion by Dr. Peter Gleick San Francisco Chronicle 2-5-11

In a desperate attempt to make it easier to solve California's complex and contentious water problems, a dangerous new idea has recently been floated -- intentionally letting some species go extinct rather than take the difficult steps needed to save them and their ecosystems. This idea should be quashed, smothered, strangled, and quickly tossed in the dumpster of failed ideas.

The first hint of this appeared earlier in February in the 52-page study released by the Delta Stewardship Council. That report argued that it was possible that some species of fish might be so devastated already and their ecosystems so ruined that they were unlikely to survive even with significant efforts to save them. This, of course, is an argument long made in private by some agricultural and urban interests unwilling to accept the difficult strategies to save endangered and threatened species because it might cost them water.

Then, just this week, the argument for explicitly permitting extinction was described in the newly released water report from the Public Policy Institute of California. They are stunningly blunt, calling for the state to consider practicing "endangered species triage," intentionally permitting a species to go extinct if an argument can be made that it will somehow help other species survive -- a very strange concept to ecologists who look at the health of overall systems. This is, however, not really an argument about letting one species die off to save other species: their argument hides the real driver behind the destruction of fisheries and aquatic ecosystems -- economic competition for water. Any species can be saved if we are willing to spend the money and put in place the policies to do so -- such efforts just come at an economic cost. PPIC acknowledges this driver deep in their report (on page 412) when they say: "The condition of native fish populations has continued to deteriorate, despite decades of well-intentioned but insufficient and poorly coordinated policies to protect them. Efforts to stop these declines now threaten the reliability of water supplies and flood management projects ."

That's the real point: now that serious efforts are finally being made to tackle the real threats driving Delta fish species to extinction, economic interests are being threatened and fighting back. The delta smelt is not being driven to extinction by conflicting priorities among other species of threatened fish. It is being driven to extinction by policies around human withdrawals and uses of water for economic gain. The idea of endangered species "triage" is simply a wedge in the door to permit species to go extinct when the policies to protect them cause hardship for special interests.

There are those who believe that killing off a species of animal, or bird, or fish in the name of economic gain is reasonable, including legislators trying to weaken or destroy the Endangered Species Act. To me this is a moral, ethical, and political outrage. Moreover, it is an infinitely dangerous idea, since once we start down that road, where do we stop? Who gets to play God? If condemning the delta smelt or coho salmon to extinction in return for a few hundred thousand acre-feet of water to grow alfalfa, or cotton, or almonds is acceptable or to permit more housing in floodplains, why not wipe out the San Joaquin kit fox and the California clapper rail in order to have more development on sensitive lands in the Central Valley and along the edges of San Francisco Bay? And why stop there? If economics rules, then those sperm whales still have lots of great oil in them and killing the last tuna for sushi is just a financial decision.

Endangered species triage? That way madness lies, with no end except spiraling ecological destruction, impoverishment of the environment, a sterile landscape, and the final triumph of money over our souls.

Fly Fishing Program for Vets ..... Attention Mission Peak Members ..... Fly Fishing Program for Vets

Who would like to join us and be part of helping our veterans through this worthwhile program?

What you might ask is involved? It can be as little as a group of us going out to Livermore and and/or Menlo Park once a month to teach fly casting and fly tying to our wounded veterans. It could go as far as accompanying a group of veterans on a fishing trip to be their 'gillie' and personal assistant on that trip. I have made the initial contact at Livermore VA Nursing unit and there seems to be an interest, but I cannot do it alone.

I'd bet we can get funding help from the FFF, NCCFFF, the Elks Lodge, Kiwanis, VFW, and other service organizations, all we need to do is give a little of our own time to those who have given so much for us. If interested please contact me, Thanks. Ken Brunskill

Editorial

It is now the time to prepare our gear for this year's fishing season. Lines need to be cleaned, reels need to be lubed and leaders need to be checked. Hopefully the flies have been tied during the winter season.

When the weather around our area clears, I'm ready to go bass fishing in the delta. This winter I rebuilt the carburetors on my outboard motor. It now runs like a new one. I'm also adding a fuel additive to the tanks to help keep the fuel fresh. Today's gasoline has 10% ethanol and it is not good for marine use. Alcohol attracts moisture and outboard motors do not like water in the gasoline. To prevent problems I also have installed an inline water separating fuel filter. Another good practice is to burn up the residual gas in the motor after the boat is back on the trailer. The best way to prevent problems with your boat is to go fishing often.

Until next month, keep those rods bent. Malcolm Dunn, Editor

Heritage Trout Quest by Harold Whitmore

July 16th 2010, 4:30 am, we are departing from Hayward. My fishing buddy Ken Brunskill and I were packed for any and all fishing conditions. In search of the Warner Lake Redband, Gooselake Redband and the McCloud Redband. With a short discussion we decided that our first fish to target would be the Warner Lake Redband

With the anticipation that the Warner Lake Redband would be the furthest and hardest fish to get, we chose to target this fish first. Our destination for the Warner Lake Redband would be the upper North-Eastern corner of California, East of Goose lake (I think if you miss the turn off you will turn around in Oregon!). We were in search of "Dismal Creek" located in "Dismal Swamp". I'm sure with a name like "Dismal" it isn't a popular vacation destination. Our drive took us over Hwy 80 to Cabelas (of course) and north on 395. Ken has a practice of changing drivers every two hours. This I have found really puts a relaxing spin on what could be "a rush to get there feeling", besides it was nice to filter the coffee that often.

Stopping for breakfast in Colfax and lunch at Cabelas we arrived at our camp destination of Cave Lake campground. Here we found a small uncrowded camping area with plenty of fire wood cut from the post winter clean-up. A quick dinner and a comfortable night in the tent we awoke at sunrise. With coffee, tea and eggs benedict (aka oatmeal) we headed up the dirt road to Dismal creek. We had been warned the road was very rough and a Four wheel drive was recommended. We were also advised not to spook the cattle in the area. We did not want them tromping into the creek.

Ken's fishing machine (a soccer mom's mini van) handled the road just fine. There were the cattle, out among the Snow Flowers and Miners Cabbage. Driving past slowly not to disturb them we entered Dismal Swamp. Dismal Swamp is swampy yes, but it is more of a lush green high meadow at this time of year. Located at the very top of a mountain pass.

Dismal Creek is no wider than four feet at the widest spot. Our research told us to fish this early in the day due to windy conditions on this high plateau. Besides needing a stealthy approach, casting to a spot only two to three feet wide is difficult enough without the help of mother nature whipping your 3 weight line around. We located a great spot to start. Just after the road crossed Dismal Creek we pulled over, geared up, and worked up stream "buddy fishing". Ken introduced me to this style of fishing with a true friend. I say true friend because you need to enjoy watching your friend catch fish as well as you. It is where one person fishes the stream as the other watches out of the way (sometimes even holding the brush back) until he has a "take" and or lands a fish. Then the other buddy fishes on until he gets a "take" or lands his fish. This could go on all day if you wanted, but we decided as soon as we both caught our fish we were not going to terrorize these rare California Heritage Trout. We were pleasantly surprised that both of us landed our fish rather quickly and within 100 yards of our car!!!

Next up, the Goose Lake Redband
